Statement of objects and reasons:

1. With India as having emerged as one of the most important nations in the field of information technology and its applications, there is a need to generate high level research manpower and produce research and technology which can contribute significantly to the global competitiveness of key sectors of the Indian economy and industry related to IT (including both information technology and communication technology).

2. It was decided therefore to setup institutes of information technology as research led institutions. Besides working on high level research and technology development in the area of IT, they would also be focused on applied research and education in selected domain areas such as manufacturing, drug development, health, energy, economics, society and public policy, etc. These institutes will also provide holistic education combining humanities and social sciences with special emphasis on human values.

3. FOUR number of Indian Institutes of Information Technology were set up by the central government as duly constituted societies registered under the Societies Registration Bill in the last decade in order to create dedicated, deemed universities for imparting high level technical and management education in the newly emerging areas of information technology and communication technology.

4. At the same time, a few institutes were estup as deemed universtities in a not-for-profit public private partnership (N-PPP) mode in which the state governments (AP and Karnataka) provided land and buildings, with the institutions raising their own recurring operating expenses. These were managed by professionals from academics and research under the guidance of fully empowered boards of governors, with representatives of government as well as industrial partners. Whereas the Board also consists of representatives from different sections of society, the institute functions as a public university setting high standards in teaching, research, technology development and societal impact.
5. It is proposed now that a law be enacted to achieve twin objectives
   1. to declare the above FOUR government institutions as institutions of national importance, retaining the individuality and autonomy of each institute; making provisions for coordination and regulation of the affairs of these institutes; and empowering these institutes to grant degrees, diplomas and other academic distinction,
   2. to allow the setting up of institutes in public private partnership mode which can function with complete autonomy and at the same time with professionalism and integrity.

The bill seeks to achieve this object.
